QC RSS Partytime

March 25, 2007 11:45pm

Back from Tennessee, and man am I ever exhausted. Thank goodness my buddy John Lee Baird sent in this guest strip by one of his students- it's the funniest (unintentional) parody of my comic I've ever read. I predict big things for young Alex!

For more information about John's awesome comic-related teaching project, you can read this article, and check out other student-created works here. Thanks again John!

The funeral went well, Cristi and her family are doing okay, and they send their gratitude to each and every one of you who sent their condolences and stuff. I appreciate it too! Cristi will still be out of town for part of this coming week, so customer service stuff may be on hold for a few days. I will be mailin' out shirts as best I can though!

Regular QC updates resume tomorrow. I do hope you will enjoy this strip as much as I did!

By weird, I mean "weird". It's quite beyond awful, in my opinion. In fact, it almost came full circle and became interesting.

Duuude read the newspaper links! It was written by a little kid that's just learning how to write comics. The whole story of the after-school program this guy is running is really interesting, too.

The loading process for this one was really bizarre, but the comic was so great! Totally worth it. I was confused until I read the article and visited the site, but now I just think it's really amazing. Mr. Baird is doing good things for the young'ns these days!

Yeah, seriously. How do you expect people to have time to criticize things properly if they're going to spend effort actually figuring out what it is they're slamming.

Sheesh!

Do you think Faye takes time to get the background on everything she snarks at? No. Dis 'em all, let Dog sort 'em out.
